Takeaways:

- Nick was clear from an early age that he wanted something different and meaningful for his life.
- He was inspired by the first African American Mayor of Baltimore City, Mayor Kurt Schmoke; this was one of the catalysts for Nick to pursue public office.
- “Leadership is easy when everything is easy; however, real leadership comes from sacrifice.” Nick tells us.
- The City Council has outlined a significant plan to impact the City of Baltimore through policy that will help residents and businesses. Bills from hiring to housing and rent or mortgage payments as well as bills to help business owners. Nick and his team have been working since day one to ensure change and impact in Baltimore City.
- Nick highlights that his time in politics before the being President of the Council has equipped him to be the best he can be right now. You can’t take for granted the experiences that God has allowed you to have that will shape you for what is next.
- Your team is key in every season; Nick explains that his team a major piece of the success and impact that they have been able to have. Nick empowers his team to know that while he is in the front or at the microphone, it is always “we” because their roles are critical. You should be building and empowering your team.
